

Out & About

WHERE TO GO, WHAT TO SEE, AND HOW TO SCARE UP SOME FALL FUN

| ON THE ROAD |

URBAN LEGENDS

In the 19th century, many cities set aside green space to serve as rural cemeteries, featuring parks and outdoor galleries. Now these resting spots have centuries-old trees, bird populations, and museum-worthy sculptures that draw visitors beyond those of the dearly departed; Mount Auburn Cemetery (right), outside Boston, is a riot of red oaks and yellow ginkgos this time of year. Here, three more places where you can join a tour or take a quiet solo stroll.

📍 Cambridge/Watertown, Massachusetts

| WHY NOT? |

Get Spooked

Plastic skeletons and peeled grapes? Child's play. If you're looking for a real thrill this Halloween, stop by one of these "haunted" homes.

Farnsworth House

Time-travel back to the Civil War at this 10-room Pennsylvania inn, considered one of the country's most active ghostly spots. Check in overnight to find out for yourself, then visit the nearby battle sites.

Gettysburg, Pennsylvania;
farnsworthhouseinn.com

Pittock Mansion

Peer inside the 23 rooms of this French chateau-style manor, built in 1914 for a wealthy newspaper publisher and his wife. Visitors claim that their phantoms linger on, enjoying their hilltop retirement home.

Portland, Oregon;
pittockmansion.org

Lemp Mansion

Raise a pint to the influential beer-making family who once lived here—and the generations of tragedy that befell them. You can stay at the inn, eat in the restaurant, and even take a nighttime haunted-history tour.

St. Louis;
lempmansion.com

CHICAGO

See monuments made by architect Louis H. Sullivan and sculptors Daniel Chester French and Lorado Taft at Graceland Cemetery.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

Stretch your arms around Cave Hill Cemetery's lovely giants, including an American yellowwood with a five-foot-diameter trunk.

BROOKLYN

Spot green monk parakeets among the Gothic spires at Green-Wood Cemetery, where NYC notables including Jean-Michel Basquiat are buried.

| IN OUR FEED |

Bridget Beth Collins, author of The Art of Flora Forager (Sasquatch Books), is Instagram-famous for the intricate woodland scenes and animals (like this fine-feathered owl) she fashions out of leaves, pods, and petals gathered on her nature walks.

📷 @flora.forager

Follow Us 📷 @marthastewart

| ON OUR BOOKSHELF |

Roll up your sleeves and flick on the gas: It's cookbook season. Yotam Ottolenghi has given us plenty of reasons to love his Israeli vegetable dishes, but he started out as a pastry chef; his latest, Sweet (Ten Speed Press), with Helen Goh, showcases the delicate flavors of desserts from his native Jerusalem. Kerry Diamond and Claudia Wu serve up a hardcover complement to their biannual food magazine, Cherry Bombe: The Cookbook (Clarkson Potter), with 100-plus recipes dedicated to the industry's most influential women, including Martha. And EyeSwoon blogger Athena Calderone debuts her first print volume, Cook Beautiful (Abrams), full of food-styling tips and gorgeous images by our former in-house photographer and now frequent Living contributor Johnny Miller.